CASE NO. JCCP 4247

REVISED RULING ON REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hearing date: 4/11/06

Ruling date: 5/16/06

After considering the moving, opposition and reply papers and the arguments of counsel at the hearing, the court now rules as follows:

On its own motion the court GRANTS reconsideration of its ruling of March 3, 2006 in which it sustained the distributor defendants' demurrer to plaintiffs' cause of action for strict liability—failure to warn. Upon reconsideration, the demurrer is OVERRULED.

I. INTRODUCTION

In their first cause of action plaintiffs allege strict liability—failure to warn—against “Pharmaceutical Distributor Does 101 to 200.” (Compl., p. 13.) In sustaining the distributor defendants' demurrer to this cause of action the court on March 3, 2006 ruled that Pharmacists cannot be held strictly liable for defects in prescription pharmaceuticals or for failure to warn of such defects. (Murphy v. E.R. Squibb &

1 Sons, Inc. (1985) 40 Cal.3d 672 [pharmacists not strictly liable because they have 2 no discretion to depart from a valid prescription, and strict liability would raise the 3 price of prescription drugs, which is against public policy].) Neither can 4 manufacturers. (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal.3d 1049, 1060-1061 [no 5 strict liability against pharmaceutical manufacturers].) [¶] It would be an 6 anomalous to hold a distributor, who stands between the manufacturer and 7 pharmacist in the chain of distribution, to a different standard.

8 At a status conference on April 11, 2006, plaintiffs requested that the court sua 9 sponte reconsider the above in light of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104 10 (Carlin), a case they did not cite in their opposition to the demurrer. In opposition, the 11 distributor defendants argued, as they argued in their demurrer, that exemption of 12 distributors of prescription drugs from the doctrine of strict liability is supported by 13 California case law, public policy, and the Restatement (Third) of Torts.

14 The court agreed to reconsider the matter, and now reverses its earlier ruling.

15 II. DISCUSSION

16 A. Reconsideration

17 A court may, on its own motion, reconsider its interim rulings. (Le Francois v.
18 Goel (2005) 35 Cal.4th 1094.) A court may also take under advisement a party's request 19 that it reconsider a ruling. (Id. at p. 1108.)

20 B. Strict Liability

21 The parties well know the law of strict liability. A manufacturer may be held 22 strictly liable for injuries caused by a defective product that it knew would not be 23 inspected by the consumer for defects. (Greenman v. Yuba Power Products, Inc. (1963) 24 59 Cal.2d 57.) This is so because a "manufacturer, unlike the public, can anticipate or 25 guard against the recurrence of hazards, [] the cost of injury may be an overwhelming 26 27 28

1 misfortune to the person injured whereas the manufacturer can insure against the risk and 2 distribute the cost among the consuming public, and [] it is in the public interest to 3 discourage the marketing of defective products.” (Brown v. Superior Court, supra, 44 4 Cal.3d at p. 1056 (Brown).) Strict liability also applies to retailers (Vandermark v. Ford 5 Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal.2d 256) but not to “those who sell their services for the 6 guidance of others” (Murphy v. E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc., supra, 40 Cal.3d at p. 677 7 (Murphy), quoting Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 Cal.2d 481, 487).

8 There are three types of product defects for which a manufacturer and distributor 9 may be held liable: Manufacturing defects, design defects, and deficient warnings or 10 instructions. (Brown, supra, at p. 1057.) Though strong policy considerations—11 protection of consumers and distribution of the cost of injury—support the doctrine of 12 strict liability generally, other policy considerations—including the “public interest in the 13 availability of drugs at an affordable price” (Brown, supra, at p. 1063)—militate against 14 applying the doctrine specifically to prescription drugs.

15 In its March 3 ruling the court identified two boundaries in the chain of 16 distribution—the drug manufacturer and the ultimate retailer—where, for policy reasons, 17 the courts have held strict liability not to apply. The court then reasoned that if strict 18 liability does not apply at the book-ends of distribution, it doesn’t apply in the middle.
19 As will be discussed below, the court misapprehended the case law’s treatment of the 20 book-ends.

21 22 C. California Case Law

23
24 In its March 3 ruling, supra, the court overstated the rule of Brown and failed to 25 limit Murphy to its rationale.

26 In Brown, the court considered whether a manufacturer of prescription drugs 27 could, like other manufacturers, be held strictly liable for injuries caused by its products.
28 After discussing various policy considerations the court held prescription drugs should be treated differently from other products. However, Brown did not, as this court stated,

1 hold that manufacturers of prescription drugs are exempt from strict liability altogether; it 2 held only that they may not be held strictly liable for injuries caused by design defects in 3 their products (id. at p. 1065) or by failure to warn of unknowable risks (id. at p. 1066.)
4 Brown held drug manufacturers could be held strictly liable for injuries caused by failure
5 to warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowable risks. (Id. at p. 1069.)

6 Thus falls one of the book-ends relied upon by this court in its March 3 ruling, for 7 plaintiff alleges the distributor defendants are subject to liability in the same wise as were 8 the manufacturer defendants in Brown—liability for failure to warn of risks about which 9 they knew or reasonably should have known.

10 The other book-end was Murphy. There, the court held pharmacists cannot be 11 held strictly liable for defects in prescription pharmaceuticals or for failure to warn of 12 such defects. (Id. at p. 681.) Defendants liken themselves to pharmacists and argue 13 Murphy exempts them, too, from strict liability.

14 In Murphy, the plaintiff asserted that a pharmacy that sells prescription drugs “is in 15 the same position as a retailer of any other consumer product, and that the reasons 16 advanced in Greenman and Vandermark for imposing strict liability necessarily apply to 17 a pharmacy.” (Murphy, at p. 676.) The court disagreed, ultimately affirming the trial 18 court’s granting of a pharmacy defendant’s motion for judgment on the pleadings. (Id. at 19 p. 681.)

20 To understand why it did so requires close reading. First, the court noted “[i]t is 21 critical to the issue posed to determine if the dominant role of a pharmacist in supplying a 22 prescription drug should be characterized as the performance of a service or the sale of a 23 product.” (Id. at p. 677.) “[T]hose who sell their services for the guidance of others . . .
24 are not liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct.” (Ibid., citation 25 omitted.) The court surveyed case law, amicus briefs, and the Business and Professions 26 and Health and Safety Codes, ultimately finding that while a “pharmacist is engaged in a 27 hybrid enterprise, combining the performance of services and the sale of prescription 28 drugs” (id. at p. 678), “[t]he Legislature must have intended . . . that even though a

1 pharmacist is paid for the medication he dispenses, his conduct in filling a prescription is 2 to be deemed a service, and . . . is immune from strict liability” (id. at p. 680).

3 Thus falls the second book-end relied upon by this court in its March 3 ruling, for 4 the distributor defendants cannot argue their business is, like a pharmacist, to provide a 5 service. They are thus in a position different from that of the pharmacy in Murphy and 6 cannot apply its holding to them.

7 The final case on point is Carlin, supra. There, after an extensive policy 8 discussion the supreme court affirmed its earlier ruling in Brown: A manufacturer of 9 prescription drugs “should bear the costs, in terms of preventable injury or death, of its 10 own failure to provide adequate warnings of known or reasonably scientifically knowable 11 risks.” (Id. at p. 1117.)

12 No California case law supports defendants’ argument that distributors of 13 prescription drugs should not be held strictly liable for injuries caused by their failure to 14 warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowable risks. The only law nearly on point 15 is to the contrary: In general, the strict liability doctrine applies to those in the chain of 16 distribution. (See Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co., supra, 61 Cal.2d at pp. 262-263 17 [“Retailers like manufacturers . . . are an integral part of the overall producing and 18 marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries resulting from defective 19 products.”].)

20 21 D. Public Policy

22
23 There being no California case law on point, the distributor defendants argue the 24 public policy considerations discussed and acknowledged in Brown, Murphy and Carlin 25 require that distributors of prescription drugs not be held strictly liable for injuries caused 26 by their failure to warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowable risks.

27 For the court’s present purpose, the important point to take away from Brown and 28 Carlin is that while for policy reasons prescription drugs are treated differently from other products, those reasons are not compelling enough to exempt drug manufacturers

1 from strict liability altogether. And policy considerations were not the basis of Murphy's
2 holding at all. (After holding that pharmacies provide a service when they dispense 3 prescription drugs, the court speculated as to why "[t]he Legislature may have 4 determined that it is not in the public interest to subject [pharmacies] to strict liability," 5 (Murphy, at p. 680), discussing various possible policy considerations the Legislature 6 could have relied upon. However, those policy considerations were discussed only 7 insofar as they supported the Legislature's action, not the court's holding, which merely 8 relied upon the Legislature's action.) There is therefore no California authority for 9 defendants' proposition that public policy requires that distributors of prescription drugs 10 be treated differently from distributors of other products for purposes of strict liability.

11 12 E. Restatement

14 Finally, defendants argue the Third Restatement of Torts holds distributors may be 15 held liable only for negligence.

16 At issue is section 6, subdivision (e), Products Liability:

17 A retail seller or other distributor of a prescription drug or medical device is 18 subject to liability for harm caused by the drug or device if: [¶] (1) at the time of 19 sale or other distribution the drug or medical device contains a manufacturing 20 defect . . . ; or [¶] (2) at or before the time of sale or other distribution of the drug 21 or medical device the retail seller or other distributor fails to exercise reasonable 22 care and such failure causes harm to persons.

23 (Rest.3d Torts, Products Liability, § 6, subd. (e), emphasis added.)

24 Missing from this description is the word "only"—though the rule states that a 25 distributor of as prescription drug may be held liable for injuries caused by its failure to 26 exercise reasonable care, it does not state that is the only circumstance in which a 27 distributor may be held liable. But that is what it means, as evidenced by comment h:

28 The rule governing most products imposes liability on wholesalers and retailers for selling a defectively designed product, or one without adequate instructions or warnings, even though they have exercised reasonable care in marketing the 1 product. [Citations.] Courts have refused to apply this general rule to 2 nonmanufacturing retail sellers of prescription drugs and medical devices and, 3 instead, have adopted the rule stated in Subsection (e). That rule subjects retailers 4 to liability only if the product contains a manufacturing defect or if the retailer 5 fails to exercise reasonable care in connection with distribution of the drug or 6 medical device. In so limiting the liability of intermediary parties, courts have 7 held that they should be permitted to rely on the special expertise of 8 manufacturers, prescribing and treating health-care providers, and governmental 9 regulatory agencies. They have also emphasized the needs of medical patients to 10 have ready access to prescription drugs at reasonable prices.

11 (Rest.3d Torts, Products Liability, § 6, subd. (e), com. h, emphasis added.)

12 As discussed above, though California cases discuss policy considerations 13 attendant upon the manufacture and distribution of prescription drugs, none has found 14 those considerations to require that actors in the chain of distribution be exempt from 15 strict liability altogether. (Though in Murphy a pharmacy was exempted from strict 16 liability, it was because a pharmacy provides a service, not because public policy requires 17 the exemption.)

18 The cases considered by The American Law Institute are no different. The court 19 will survey them:

20 Elsroth v. Johnson & Johnson (S.D.N.Y. 1988) 700 F.Supp. 151 held a 21 manufacturer and retailer cannot be liable in damages for the criminal conduct of 22 unknown third party who tampered with the manufacturer's product post-distribution.

23 Jones v. Irvin (S.D.Ill. 1985) 602 F.Supp. 399 held a pharmacist had no duty to 24 warn a customer that a drug is being prescribed in dangerous amounts, that the customer 25 is being over medicated, or that various drugs in their prescribed quantities could cause 26 adverse reactions.

27 Murphy, supra, held a pharmacy cannot be held strictly liable because in 28 dispensing prescription medications it predominantly provides a service, as opposed to effecting a sale.

Leesley v. West (Ill.App.Ct. 1988) 518 N.E.2d 758 held that under the learned intermediary doctrine a drug manufacturer has a duty to warn only prescribing doctors of 1 the inherent dangers of the drug, not consumers directly, and that a pharmacist should be 2 held to no greater duty than a manufacturer.

3 Lemire v. Garrard Drugs (Mich.Ct.App. 1980) 291 N.W.2d 103 held a successor 4 drug store could not be held liable for injuries caused by the predecessor drug store's 5 filling a doctor's prescription.

6 Parker v. St. Vincent Hosp. (N.M.App. 1996) 919 P.2d 1104 held public policy 7 favored not imposing strict liability on hospitals for supplying a defectively designed 8 implant selected by a physician. The court reversed the grant of summary judgment on 9 plaintiff's negligence claim, holding the hospital may have a duty to investigate the safety 10 of the implants before supplying them.

11 Batiste v. American Home Products Corp. (N.C.Ct.App. 1977) 231 S.E.2d 269 12 noted that under North Carolina law the doctrine of strict liability does not apply to 13 retailers (id. at p. 275) and held a druggist is not strictly liable for providing a drug 14 ordered by a physician (id. at pp. 275-276).

15 Coyle v. Richardson-Merrell, Inc. (Pa. 1991) 584 A.2d 1383 held that public 16 policy requires that a pharmacist not be held strictly liable damages caused because by 17 the pharmacist's failure to provide warnings of the risks of a drug to a patient/consumer.
18 (This case goes one step beyond Murphy, supra, but still does not extend the rule to 19 defendant distributors.)

20 Makripodis v. Merrell-Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (Pa.Super.Ct. 1987) 523 A.2d 21 374 is to the same effect as Coyle v. Richardson-Merrell, supra.

22 Pittman v. Upjohn Co. (Tenn. 1994) 890 S.W.2d 425 held a manufacturer and a 23 prescribing physician had only a duty to use reasonable care in giving warnings about an 24 unavoidably dangerous drug.

25 In sum, none of the cases relied upon by the American Law Institute in 26 formulating section 6, subdivision (3) of the Restatement supports the proposition that 27 distributors of prescription drugs (other than pharmacists) should be exempt from strict 28 liability for failure to warn of known or reasonably knowable risks.

1 F. Question of First Impression

3 Though no California case, no recitation of public policy found in California case 4 law, and no case supporting the Third Restatement of Torts supports the proposition that 5 an exception to the strict liability doctrine should be made for distributors of prescription 6 drugs, no authority prohibits such an exception either, and the proposition that there 7 should be one has its appeal. Some of the policy considerations applicable to pharmacists 8 may apply to distributors:

9 [T]he wide availability of a full range of prescription drugs at economical cost 10 [may] outweigh[] the advantage to the individual consumer of being able to 11 recover for injuries on a strict liability basis rather than to be limited to claims 12 arising from negligence.

13 If [distributors] were held strictly liable for the drugs they [distribute], some of 14 them, to avoid liability, might restrict availability by refusing to [distribute] drugs 15 which pose even a potentially remote risk of harm, although such medications may 16 be essential to the health or even the survival of patients. Furthermore, in order to 17 assure that a [distributor] receives the maximum protection in the event of suit for 18 defects in a drug, the [distributor] may select the more expensive product made by 19 an established manufacturer when he has a choice of several brands of the same 20 drug. . . . "Why choose a new company's inexpensive product, which has received 21 excellent reviews in the literature for its quality, over the more expensive product 22 of an established multinational corporation which will certainly have assets 23 available for purpose of indemnification 10, 20, or 30 years down the line?"
24 [Citation omitted.]

25 [S]ince the doctor who ordered the drug provided by the [distributor] cannot be 26 held strictly liable for its defects and in some circumstances the manufacturer who 27 created the defect can also escape liability, it would be unfair and burdensome to 28 expose the [distributor] alone to strict liability

(Murphy, supra, at pp. 680-681.)

25 But these considerations are speculative, and the court, being aware of no judicial 26 conclusion on them, will leave their resolution to the Legislature.

27 Finally, the distributor defendants argue that a distributor who neither created nor 28 tested a drug "has no connection with physicians, certainly knows far less about the drug than does the manufacturer, [] is in no position to independently test or analyze a drug

1 and/or its labeling,” and is “not privy to proprietary and non-public information known to 2 the manufacturers”, and therefore cannot reasonably be held strictly liable for failure to 3 warn. (Opp., p. 7.)

4 This argument, too, has its appeal. But the same can be said of distributors of 5 many products, and with respect to them public policy is well established:

6 [T]he seller, by marketing his product for use and consumption, has undertaken 7 and assumed a special responsibility toward any member of the consuming public 8 who may be injured by it; [] the public has the right to and does expect, in the case 9 of products which it needs and for which it is forced to rely upon the seller, that 10 reputable sellers will stand behind their goods; [] public policy demands that the 11 burden of accidental injuries caused by products intended for consumption be 12 placed on those who market them, and be treated as a cost of production against 13 which liability insurance can be obtained; and [] the consumer of such products is 14 entitled to the maximum of protection at the hands of someone, and the proper 15 persons to afford it are those who market the products.

16 (Rest.2d Torts, § 402A, com. c.)

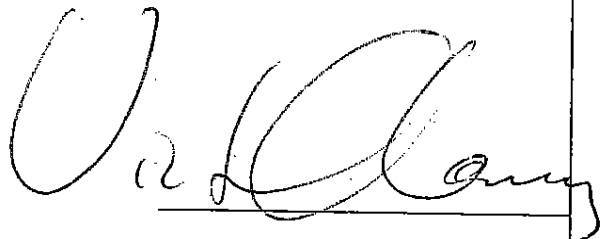

17 Defendants point to no authority that makes an exception to the doctrine of strict 18 liability for distributors in an industry analogous to the prescription pharmaceutical 19 industry. This court will not be the first to make such an exception at the pleading stage.

20 In sum:

21 On its own motion the court GRANTS reconsideration of its ruling of March 22 3, 2006 in which it sustained the distributor defendants’ demurrer to plaintiffs’ 23 cause of action for strict liability—failure to warn. Upon reconsideration, the 24 demurrer is OVERRULED.

25 IT IS SO ORDERED.
